

Kathy Glavanis-Grantham (US/Greek citizen, resident of Ireland) trained as a critical social anthropologist at the University of Hull, England specialising in development and the Middle East. Since October 2002, she has been a member of HAI and began to embark on research on the transnational pharmaceutical industry in Ireland. In September 2004, she co-organised a conference at UCC which coincided with the annual meeting of HAI and co-edited a book which emerged out of this conference. In September 2011, she organised a student event preceding the HAI Europe Open Seminar at UCC. Since joining HAI she has participated in its annual meetings on a regular basis. During the last ten years she has deepened her interests in health and the impact of the transnational pharmaceutical industry through her research, teaching and PhD supervision. She has demonstrated a commitment to the work and mission of HAI as indicated above and has a range of experience to contribute to the HAI Europe Association Board.
